Gentlemen:

Current work in this laboratory by Dr. [redacted] and associates. The effects of a synthetic dimethyl heptyl analogue of the active ingredient of marihuana are being compared with those of thiopental on EEG arousal in acute cat preparations, EEG and behavioral arousal in chronic cat preparations, and on the transfer of sensory impulses through the brain stem reticular formation. This work is aimed at elucidating the mechanism of the CNS depression caused by the marihuana analogue.

Yours very truly,

PROJECT CRYPTO : MKULTRA 148

INVESTIGATOR : Dr. [redacted]

RENEWAL DATE : October 1964

1. This project provides for the utilization of the professional services of Dr. [redacted]. Since the initiation of this project he has proved to be a reliable source of information on the pharmacological and physiological information of special chemical compounds of current interest in the [redacted] program. The information provided has been utilized in maintaining and advancing our knowledgeability of unpublished data and information which permits us a better basic understanding of the sites of action of materials significant in influencing animal and human behavior and guides us in selection of material and experimental techniques.

2. He has reported on detailed experiments he was using to demonstrate that high and low spinal sections blocked the action of a dimethyl heptyl substituted tetrahydrocannabinol on the polysynaptic flexion reflex whereas the mid brain section did not. The site of action is indicated in the lower brain stem.

3. The consistant depressant action on these reflexes is probably due to a summation of possible depressant actions locally on the reflex system and at points in the motor facilitory systems. It is hoped that work in this area will eventually identify the mechanism responsible for the ataxia produced by high doses of the active principle of marihuana.

4. The long latent period experienced in the use of C-9 may be attributed to the mineral or vegetable oil vehicle which is used frequently in oral dosage forms.

5. Attention has been called to the diethylamide of 2-methoxy-4-allyl phenoxy acetic acid which possesses a narcotic and powerful analeptic respiratory action. It causes stronger respiratory stimulation than that obtained with most analeptics.

6. A report by [redacted] of the [redacted] was given to Dr. [redacted] for review and criticism. This report is of considerable interest to [redacted] since it describes interactions between pesticidal chemicals and psychotherapeutic compounds. The pesticidal chemicals are of the acetylcholinesterase inhibitor class, a class which includes our CW organs phosphate materials. Pentobarbital and 1-Naphtbyl N-methyl carbamate ("Sevin") (a reversible anticholinesterase material) gave directly additive responses. Chlorpromazine greatly augmented the response to "Sevin". This was not related to changes in the brain cholinesterase activity. Pilocarpine which does not block cholinesterase increased and prolonged the anticholinesterase action of Sevin. This pattern offers interesting possibilitite or interaction among materials of more direct interest to [redacted].

7. Dr. [redacted] is summarizing the latest information and the state of the art in setting the stage for and triggering epileptiform seizures in mammals. He will maintain his contacts in the various domestic and overseas laboratories with a special attention within security on those phenomena of interest to [redacted].

8. Dr. [redacted] will continue to provide professional services, review and set up protocols for critical preclinical animal testing, will seek out sources of information and provide data available on direct request of [redacted] or whenever data or information is revealed to him which he believes will be of interest to [redacted].
