Purpose: To study in animals and man the specific effect of central nervous depressant drugs.

This will be pursued under the following headings:

a) Atropine-like central nervous system depressants.

b) Other synthetic central nervous system depressants.

c) Extraction, identification and pharmacological action of active principles from plants. K

d) Effects of these agents in schizophrenia.

B [redacted] will have available sufficient pharmacological, psychological and biochemical talent so that we will be able to undertake as a major research effort the study in animals and eventually normal man and schizophrenic patients the various synthetic chemicals and plant extracts which may be supplied by industrial and other research laboratories.

A biochemist will be employed part time to extract and identify active principles from various plants the crude powder of which shows definite pharmacological action. These crude drugs and active principles will be assayed by the pharmacologist. The toxicity or potency will be determined and chronic toxicity experiments in animals will be undertaken to determine the safety of the drugs. These drugs will then be cautiously tested for their effect in schizophrenics, and will also be tested in normal human volunteers for their peculiar effect in man. The project therefore provides for pharmacological, enzymological, biochemical and psychological consultants. These will all be part time, but will devote a definite share of their time to the pursuit of this research project. A full time work will be done by a fellow in psychology and another fellow in biochemistry and pharmacology.

The equipment needed will be extraction apparatus, fraction collectors, ph meters, centrifuge and preparatory centrifuge. In addition, we will need certain psychometric testing equipment to supplement the material now available. Expenses and expendable supplies will be needed for modest stipends for the human volunteers. These funds will also be used for the purchase of solvents and other chemicals. Travel is divided into two items: The attendance at scientific meetings and the need for travel funds to allow the drugs to be taken to [redacted] for initial testing. This will cost about $100.00 per trip, and it is planned that one trip per month will be made for this purpose.
