FINAL REPORT OF WORK PERFORMED UNDER FELLOWSHIP GRANT FROM [redacted] B

Work Performed

Since submittal of the Semi-Annual Report on this work, a dissertation proposal was completed and later revised in consultation with advisors of the [redacted] B
B [redacted] The proposal was accepted in July 1958, after an oral hearing. A copy of the revised dissertation proposal, C [redacted] has previously been submitted to the B [redacted] A first draft of the dissertation itself is partially completed. A precise schedule for completing it cannot be given at present because of details to be worked out with a new member of the committee. It is expected that it will be completed in time for an award of the PhD degree during the current year.

Funds provided by the grant have been completely expended. (See "Statement of Expenditures" enclosed.) The grant was used for maintenance of self and family during the period July 1, 1957 to June 1, 1958 and July 1, 1959 to October 1, 1959, less a total of 44 days during these periods on which days the grantee was otherwise employed. Interruption of work on the grant for other employment was endorsed by the [redacted] according B to a letter from the Executive Director dated June 30, 1958.

Many delays were experienced in making arrangements with B the [redacted] for a dissertation committee and in securing approval for a proposal. The major portion of the work performed under the grant was done in accordance with a proposal which was unacceptable to the dissertation committee that was finally constituted.

To keep the work that could not be used in the dissertation from being wasted effort, the grantee has prepared several papers for publication based in whole or part on this research. These papers are as follows:

Dear [redacted] C

Have been checking through our project files in order to determine if we have received accountings from each of our grantees for our auditors.

I do not find one from you. Perhaps, you have not finished using the funds? If you have and if you could send me a summary statement of how the funds were expended, it would be of great help to me.

Many thanks. Hope all goes well with you and yours.

Dear [redacted]

Enclosed is our check for the 3rd quarterly payment on your grant. It was more convenient for us to make a quarterly payment than reduce the amount.

Thank you for the additional material. I am still having a great deal of difficulty bending myself to productive effort on the research approach; the material will be helpful.

I was glad to hear that the cyst was removed, and that you are recovering. I can imagine how uncomfortable you were.

Best regards.

2. [redacted] has undertaken a study of how individuals and groups who are subject to apparently all-powerful, coercive authority successfully defy this authority in pursuit of their own goals. It is the intention of [redacted] to study the method which prisoners use to defy authority while under the extreme restrictions of a prison environment. This type of study is a natural extension of our previous work on Communist Prison Methods and provides the necessary follow up for the development of systems for resisting interrogation in imprisonment.

TENTATIVE PROPOSAL
A STUDY OF ANTI-AUTHORITARIAN BEHAVIOR

The study will investigate some of the characteristics of the social situation which determine whether or not anti-authoritarian sentiments are expressed in anti-authoritarian acts and which influence the forms such activity may take.

My effort during the year will be to carry out a research and to further my educational preparation. This research and education will be relevant to my interest in the general problem of how individuals and groups who are subject to apparently all-powerful, coercive authority successfully defy this authority in pursuit of their own goals.

My interest in this topic, and my formulation of it as a general topic in the above terms, stems from what I conceive as a common thread running through much of the research I have done. For the past three years, most of my time has been devoted to studying the implications for the [redacted] of the capture of [redacted] by the B Communists. This formulation was of obvious relevance to many of the central problems of the [redacted] study. B

During the entire five year period I spent in [redacted] B research, I was concerned in planning and carrying out research which frequently involved the study of similar relationships. Our research was to B support [redacted] and special operations. Consequently, it was oriented frequently toward the problems of captive populations. I began an [redacted] research in April 1953 B B/C [redacted] I planned to study instances in which individuals and groups, seemingly powerless in terms of numbers, weapons, organizations and legitimacy, successfully resisted a seemingly all-powerful authority (e.g. prison riots, hunger strikes, general strikes, work slow-downs, boycotts, terrorism, etc.). The objective was to determine whether there were principles which could be stated at some high level of generality which would be true of all, or of broad classes, of such events. The practical aim was to provide potential advice on how [redacted] might be used to support and control them. I had completed a field study of a prison riot before stating this project in formal terms. As the initial focus of the project itself, the general strike was chosen as a topic. A preliminary review led me to the conclusion that the general strike was one of the most likely forms in which East European satellite discontent might take overt revolutionary form. The occurrence of general strikes also appeared to me to be a situation in which [redacted] had a potential role as a controlling or supporting force. Priority which was given to the [redacted] problem required me to suspend work on this study of the general strike three months after I began to review literature on this topic. The experience was sufficient to convince me that it would be possible to derive principles of considerable power relating both to the generation and the outcome of defiance of coercive authority.

This sketch of the background of my interest identifies it most broadly. I propose that my research during the year be on a limited and highly specific empirical problem in this general area, rather than aspiring toward a treatise. I wish to complete a paper which will be acceptable as a dissertation for the Ph. D. in

B [redacted] since I have completed all other requirements there for this degree. I would propose to locate myself for the period at such place as appears to me to hold forth greatest promise as a source of data for a well-defined problem in this general field and of professional guidance and assistance. I would seek to remedy those deficiencies in my educational background in which the institution at which I locate is particularly strong.

[redacted] B/C

Dear [redacted] C

I vote definitely in favor of a grant of $10,000 to [redacted] from the [redacted] B to assist him in studying how individuals and groups who are subject to apparently all-powerful, coercive authority successfully defy this authority in pursuit of their own goals.

It is sensible of him to plan to do his investigative work in a fashion and under auspices which will get him a Ph.D. degree. I trust, however, that in doing so he will successfully pursue his own goals with a high degree of intellectual integrity and independence of the "apparently all-powerful, coercive authority" of the degree-granting institution. By this I intend no disparagement of the institution of his choice,--I merely mean to indicate that the grant is to him for his study, not dependent upon conforming to degree requirements.

I see reason to hope that his approach and the publication of his results (and the subsequent academic scrutiny of his study) will help to establish a more clearly action-oriented connotation of the concept of "attitude," which has been too much "paper-and-pencil" oriented in the literature of sociology and social psychology.

One aspect of his basic problem, which seems to me of the greatest practical importance, as well as the deepest theoretical significance, may be stated: How does one establish and maintain morale--an integrating sense of shared commitment to a highly valued cause--when the others (those with whom one shares the commitment) are "imagined" persons, remote, or in indirect contact, rather than physically present, in direct contact?

My daily work presents to me patients (schizophrenic patients) some of whom appear to me to be out of rapport with those in authority, yet seeking to maintain some sense of morale through awkward hallucinatory and delusional imaginati[illegible]adeship with idealized figures. Schizophrenic patients do not deve[illegible]very robust or effective integration in such a shared commitment. It is lik[illegible]o be silly, sentimental and stubborn. The phenomenon does however seem to present somewhat the same question that I mentioned in the preceding paragraph, which I take to be a crucial one in [redacted] C proposal.

Sincerely yours,

In sending [redacted] proposal to the directors I removed his budget because:

a) few foundations go above $10,000. on underwrite grants

b) [redacted] & both felt it would be viewed as a boondoggle for one of my friends,

c) [redacted] felt [redacted] should make some concessions since he was furthering his status & education,

d) Other arrangements can likely be made for some costs such as data processing, secretarial help, travel

I suggested to the Board an amount of 10M and referred it for their comments.

Do you feel there's enough focus to this problem to justify its handling as a "project" rather than a 'grant' — that might make a difference in its handling.
