SUBJECT : MKULTRA Subproject 93

1. This project was approved, under the authority granted in the memorandum dated 13 April 1953 from the DCI to the DD/A (DD/S). The project was approved on 11 August 1959 in the amount of $9,735.00.

2. Review of internal TSD records indicate that only one funding ($9,735.00) has been made to [redacted] for this project. Further that [redacted] has passed to and received an accounting from the grantee in the amount of $9,578.63. This accounting which was recorded on your voucher No. 445831, reflects unused grant funds in the amount of $156.37.

3. From a perusal of the myriad of Vouchers which touch on the many MKULTRA subprojects it appears that the entry made on your voucher No. 352331 is a duplication of other entries affecting this account.

4. As of 30 September 1965 the 760.0 account Subsidiary Ledger reflects an outstanding balance for subproject 93 of $4,927.03. This amount is over stated and should be adjusted to reflect the correct outstanding balance of $156.37 as stated on the grantees last accounting.

PROPOSAL FOR RESEARCH ON SOME ASPECTS OF MASS CONVERSION

Whether conversion on fundamental matters of ideology and morality can be achieved on a massive scale constitutes an important theoretical problem. Its practical import, moreover, is brought home when one considers its direct bearing on some seemingly diverse phenomena, such as transformations achieved in "therapeutic" groups, the "brainwashing" of American POWs in Korea, the appeal of modern mass evangelism, the enthusiasm aroused by some revolutionary mass movements, etc. But the collective aspects of mass conversion, it seems are not easily studied by the conventional experimental designs or statistical manipulation, which are often held up as the ideal in social research.

Concrete instances of apparent mass conversion can nevertheless be studied scientifically, if one approaches them indirectly by drawing on available findings of parallel phenomena. Many psychological and sociological studies having closely to standard methods of investigation contain findings whose relevance to the problem of "conversion" have rarely been considered systematically. It is proposed then, first, to extract some of the already available findings and, second, to apply them to case materials already collected. Apart from this effort towards synthesis on the basis of reports of mass phenomena, no steps aimed at independent validation of propositions are proposed.

Working Assumptions

To be fruitful this investigation must begin with an adequate definition of conversion and of the phenomena to be subsumed under this generic type.

As a working definition governing the research, the following is proposed: A conversion is a fundamental change (i.e. an about-face) concerning basic moral, religious, or political matters which lasts after the pressures which have induced it are removed.

This definition should allow one to relate "conversion" to attitude change, on the one hand, and personality change, on the other. Furthermore, the requirement that it be relatively permanent allows one to distinguish between conversion and many temporary outbursts of hysteria, etc. which have sometimes been taken as the essence of a conversion experience. A review of the relevant literature should help to refine the definition and perhaps permit also a distinction among several subtypes.

A second working assumption is to be made: mass conversion is a collective affair in as much as those influenced also influence one another. It is not simply a series of parallel changes that take place in a plurality of individuals under similar pressures. On the contrary, snowball-like effects are postulated.

Major Issues

The investigation shall deal with three distinct, though logically related, issues. Each of them can be put as a question:

(1) Who is susceptible ?
(2) Under what conditions are changes effected ?
(3) What is the nature of the change ?

As a preliminary to any attempt at synthesis, the literature must be reviewed for any clues concerning these three questions.

Re (1) the susceptibles: There is the issue of whether conversion rests, as James has held, upon the existence of a submerged side of the "divided" self which the experience or crisis merely brings to the fore. Can a person be converted in a direction not in line with predispositions, which may perhaps not be acknowledged by the person? There are also questions concerning the make-up of the susceptible personality. According to some, conversion is a reaction against authoritarian pressures experienced as alien; the convert rebels. Other scholars have held to the opposite view, namely that the lack of strong commitment is what makes for susceptibility.

Re (2) the conditions of conversion. An examination of the various kinds of pressures applied is prerequisite for an analysis of the situation in which new commitments are effected. Pressure, as used here, includes more than consciously planned manipulation to effect a change, i.e. the advance preparation, warm-up, and gimmickry which precede the appeal. To be considered also are the alternatives open to the individual, the impact of public images and the kind of support they appear to provide, and the effect of an act being defined by others as a conversion. The best that one can aim at in this regard is a "natural history" of the phenomenon. Theoretically it should be possible to spell out the necessary and sufficient conditions that impel or that limit change in any given direction. Here is also where case materials will be especially useful.

Re (3) the age-old question of whether a permanent change is achieved. It seems advisable to reformulate this question by inquiring as to what residual changes remain once the pressures toward the new commitment are removed or eased. Does a permanent reorganization of beliefs require sustained group support? Or does the individual's enthusiasm and group enthusiasm experience a natural let-down once the initial excitement and the accompanying pressures wear off? Of course, these are not the only alternatives. Many unanticipated reactions (designed to lessen conflict between ideologies abandoned and the new ones accepted) may leave a permanent residue.

Plan of Study

Step 1: Analysis of what has been typed as conversion in the past:

(a) A specific, usually a religiously-typed, experience which signifies inner commitment to a cause. The recognition of such an experience as conversion involves "ascription" of a new role by others. But the distinction between crystallization of latent dispositions and an about-face is obscured in this conceptualization.

(b) Defection from one religious, political, or national affiliation to another. Actually this need not be a new commitment inasmuch as the change may be made as a matter of opportunism and relates only to interests which are peripheral.

(c) A change of outlook, whether sudden or dramatic or gradual, on a matter central to the personality. This kind of conversion appears essentially a matter of "resocialization." Basic values and highly patterned forms of behavior are affected.

Studies of "conversion" are to be evaluated in the light of these distinctions.

Step 2. Evaluation of individual cases of conversion, using the definition "c" above as a guide in selection of materials. This will mean the inclusion of materials which have often been omitted in discussions of conversion. Relevant autobiographical, clinical, and historical materials are to be reviewed. The main purpose of this review is to extract hypotheses and questions concerning the three questions: susceptibility to conversion, the events that precked it, and the nature of the change.

Step 3. A review of techniques found effective in bringing about a basic change in social role. Relevant data are to be evaluated with regard to two questions: the personality types on whom they are most effective and the permanence of the changes produced.

The following techniques would appear to be most relevant here:

(a) hypnosis and suggestion

(b) therapy, the sustained mobilization of affect

(c) "ascription," the signification of change of status as a result of initiation ceremonies, specific experiences, etc. which legitimate the acceptance of a new role in the eyes of others.

(d) persuasion, the susceptibility to rational argument by appeals to interests and dispositions in a person to some degree conscious of being the target of such appeals

(e) enforced isolation, individual confinement, and all techniques whereby perception and information can be made homogeneous and monopolized, minimizing any competing influences

(f) stress, sanction, and the threat of severe punishment—all of which tend to change the reward structure.

93-2

Step 4. Analysis of conversion in a group context. The emphasis is to be on the collective influences which operate to define the roles of individuals vis-a-vis one another and give rise to new group identities. Below are some subject areas with examples:

(a) Group therapy. Classical group therapy; AA and the Society of Reformed Drunkards in the 1840s; New York City Youth Board activities.

(b) Recruitment into the active cell or the nucleus of the select. Political and religious sects and other "natural" microcosms.

(c) Group influences during forced detainment. Prisoners of war, concentration camp, and the Zwangsgemeinschaft.

(d) Changes in social environment due to geographical movement. The "resocialization" of the immigrant or migrant in response to a voluntary change in his cultural environment but without necessary prior motivation to abandon his old commitments.

(e) Changes in response to organized campaigns and pageantry in which mass emotions are mobilized around new symbols. Revivalism (especially Billy Graham Crusade), political spectacles, etc.

(f) Change during a period of political instability when class structure and style of life are fundamentally affected. Changes in life conditions which affect the total society.

Step 5. Synthesis

The diverse materials covered and the generalizations to be derived are to focus on the three basic problems outlined for investigation. To repeat, the study should permit some clarification, for example, of the rather crude hypothesis that some kind of inner discord precedes conversion always. A second hypothesis, also in rather broad form, holds that the critical situation in which pressure is applied must always entail a narrowing of alternatives and the promise of conflict resolution. Such a proposition needs, above all, clarification. Finally, it has been contended that the only guarantee for a conversion's permanence are accompanying supportive changes in the converts immediate social environment. Just what the nature of such support is also might be clarified.

Another problem to be touched upon concerns the "interchangability" of susceptibles. Are the various kinds of political, social, religious commitments really equivalent? Again this survey should enable us to pinpoint more precisely areas of investigation in need of more intensive study.

Time Schedule and Costs

Preliminary work is to commence in the summer of 1959. Unfortunately there appears practically no chance that either Dr. [redacted] or I can get any kind of leave or reduced teaching load during the latter half of 1959. During this period, a research assistant (with an equivalent of a masters' degree) could get started with bibliographical work and abstracting of literature. During the next semesters, either one of us (or both) will seek a half-time reduction in teaching load to speed along the project.

A two-year period is envisioned as necessary to complete this analysis.

Support of self (or Dr [redacted] to get reduction of teaching load at $5500 per annum) 3 semesters of half-time		$4875
Research assistant for one year at half-time, $5000 per annum		$2500
Travel to consult sources and inspect data or consult with investigators		$ 500
Miscellaneous Research Expenses
Library privileges	$ 225
Supplies	$ 150
Purchase of materials, reports, etc.	$ 100
		$ 475
Typing of manuscript and drafts		$ 500
		$8850
10 per cent for unexpected contingencies		885
		$9735

MEMORANDUM TO: The Director

SUBJECT: Project Proposal, Category B - By Dr. [redacted] C

The enclosed proposal was solicited in order to take advantage of a personal talent and interest on the part of the Principal Investigator. An attempt will be made to integrate some data [redacted] existing in the hands of some of [redacted] projects [redacted] and B data of [redacted] into one document tying together evaluations of change of attitude, personality and behavior.

While the "research" involved in this proposal is largely of a literary nature, it is felt that an attempt to conceptualize these phenomena in a broader context will be useful for programming and planning for the Society in the future. The only comparable work of which we are aware at the present time is being conducted at [redacted] by Dr. [redacted] and will be taken into account as this study progresses.
