A [redacted] [redacted] [redacted]

1 May 1961

As you will see from the underlying buckslips, I forwarded this to [redacted] before giving it to you. Today I had a short talk with [redacted]t which time he expressed real enthusiasm for investigating some practical application of the principles involved in the attached paper. This gets very exotic very fast, but [redacted] is convinced that there are numerous very interesting things that could be done within the present state of this particular art. He asked me for an opinion as to whether you would look favorably on his pursuing this fairly vigorously - to include spending some money. I said I was reasonably sure you would be and that you would wish to discuss this with him in due course.
